HARRISON TRIUMPHANT.

Yesterday's Battle at Minneapolis.

THE BLAINE FORCES ROUTED FOOT, HORSE AND DRAGOON.

Scenes of Wild Excitement, Which Baffled Description—A Graphic Account of Yesterday's Proceedings.

Special to the APPEAL.

Minneapolis June 10.—It is easy this morning to see who are the wire pullers of the convention and the single handed workers of the delegation.

You meet the haggard, anxious faces of men who have not slept a wink all last night and some who did not even sleep the night before.

Napoleon lost the battle of Waterloo from loss of sleep and there are men here whose brains are so worn out with worry and over work that they are incapable of thinking any more.

THE WORN AND WEARY QUAY.

An hour ago I saw Quay coming from his hotel. His step was unsteady, his face the face of a man ten years older than it looked forty eight hours ago.

I have not seen Clarkson but he can't look any more worn and weary.

To me Quay looked like a beaten man as he came out of the darkened hall of the hotel. An instant later he faced the light and stepped into the street with an air of gladness and confidence.

If there is any load of impending defeat on his mind he was able to mask it when he mingled among his fellows.

The convention is assembling and the vast and excited crowds of spectators have already nearly filled the spacious galleries.

It is a grand sight; a sight worth one's lifetime to see.

Twelve thousand is the estimate made of the people who can crowd this hall, where the next ruler of the nation will be named.

Every individual in the assemblage is in the highest tension of excitement. Each has a boyfunt hope of the success of a favorite.

In the press gallery a hundred rumors are flying about, and each correspondent is swapping information with his neighbor.

It is understood here that the session is to be startled with big surprises, and the most important is that Blaine's name will not be presented, as a combination has been effected by which McKinley will be nominated.

All concede that Harrison must win on the first ballot or never.

The New England States have been in session this morning trying to effect a combination on Reed.

FACE TO FACE.

The Convention is called to order now. It is half past 11 o'clock, and a minister lifts his voice in the mockery of a prayer, which nobody wants to hear, and all are glad it is soon over.

The prayer, however, has the effect of hushing the turmoil, and then the two armies are face to face.

The question of the minority report of the Credentials Committee is the opening gun of the battle. The Blaine men send out their skirmish line, but Quay, ever on the alert, announces that they will not oppose anything. He wants to clear the field of all obstruction and open the real battle.

A buzz goes through the hall; it is clear to everybody that the Harrison men realize their strength, and are eager for the charge.

The Blaine men see that it is useless now to spar for time or show a waver in the line, and so the Blaine forces push to the administration entrenchments with fixed bayonets.

Mrs. Helen Foster, a temperance reformer, has gained the platform and addresses the Convention.

A woman seems out of place at this time, but it is the tacit understanding that a woman will be listened to on such an occasion.

After she retires the roll call of States begins.

THE ROAR ON THE BLAINE BATTERY.

The Blaine men open fire from the Colorado battalion; the State that leads the silver revolt against the administration.

Wolcott takes the floor and nominates Blaine amid a burst of cheering that lasts several minutes.

His first words were, "Blaine has never been President of our country but he will be on the first of March next."

There was nothing remarkable in this utterance, but the words had not died from the speakers lips when a wave of applause rocked the building, men rose and yelled, and women also on their feet waved their handkerchiefs and parasols.

"I am proud to cast my vote for a man whose first thought has always been for country and last thought for self." [Another series of yells.]

As he went on eulogizing the man from Maine, cheer after cheer rebounded to every sentence and the cry, "Blaine, Blaine" echoed from every side.

THE HARRISON GUNS IN ACTION.

When Indiana was reached Richard Thompson took the platform as an army of delegates cheered every footstep.

He sent this shot at the Blaine line:

"I propose to present the name of a man who does seek success by the detraction of any other great Republican. [Cheers]

"I nominate for President General Harrison, the Warrior Statesman."

In an instant the hall swelled with cheers. It was a prolonged roar from floor and gallery, gathering volume every instant, a crescendo of applause that ended in a howl.

It was longer and louder than the response to Blaine's name, and then it died away only to be renewed again.

When order was restored and name of Michigan was reached there was a pause, and many who hoped to cheer for Alger were disappointed, and the State was passed in silence.

Then Eustice, of Minnesota, took the platform to second the nomination of Blaine.

He spoke of McKinley, the great disciple of Protection, and there was tremendous cheering.

This was done to feel the pulse of the crowd, that they might know where to break ground to in case Harrison did not win on the first ballot and Blaine had to retire.

THE DEMONSTRATION OF THE DAY.

When Eustice reached Blaine's name, the ground swell of applause rose in a dull roar like the growl of thunder, and then burst like an avalanche over the assemblage.

The manner in which it rolled back and forth over the tempestuous sea of frantic men, bristling hands and waving handkerchiefs, is something never to be forgotten.

The band struck up with forty pieces, but the band was like a leaf in the storm of sound.

The demonstration in favor of Blaine is something that no pen can fittingly describe. It lasted fully twenty minutes, and the audience seemed to have turned into an assemblage of lunatics.

Such a demonstration of public approval could have been secured by no man in the United States save Blaine, and to have won it were worth a lifetime of public service.

The testimonial, rough and savage in its aspects as it may have been, would be regarded by many a public man with as much inward satisfaction as a Presidential nomination, and in many instances harder to secure.

GETTING TO CLOSE QUARTERS.

After the din had subsided, Mattison of Mississippi took the platform for Blaine, and there was a revival in a tame way of the Blaine enthusiasm, but the storm had spent its fury and the audience was weak from exhaustion.

Dewey took the platform for Harrison amid a fresh cannonade of cheers, and his speech was attentively listened to. He made one break, and it was a bad one, and all the more astounding that a man of his clear head could have given such an opening.

"Who," he said dramatically, "will be given credit for the great acts of the administration?" and like a flash came a voice from the gallery, "Blaine," and a burst of laughter went over the hall, temporarily staggering Dewey, but he soon recovered his composure and drew forth burst after burst of cheers, and in closing said that Harrison's course had reflected more credit on his ancestry than his ancestors had on him, taking his seat amid prolonged cheering.

Several colored orators also spoke. Then came more of the Chinese

TOM-TOM BUSINESS.

Then came more of the Chinese

tom-tom business. Banners bearing the picture of Blaine, and others bearing the picture of Harrison were paraded round the hall, and gaudy colored plumes of the Blaine men waved, and then

THE REAL FIGHT BEGAN.

There were no more candidates to present, and the roll was called.

HARRISON'S WITHERING FIRE.

The Harrison States fell in line with a steady precision, and poured broadside after broadside into the reeling Blaine phalanx at close range.

The whole Harrison line was on the charge, and as State after State cut and slashed the Blaine ranks the audience began to cheer again, while Clarkson tried to rally his broken forces unavailingly until all hope was gone, and he sank back in a chair a fallen, beaten man.

So the Blaine Guard went down fighting like veterans, but beaten with Harrison's 565, Blaine 175, and the next President of the United States was nominated.

Whitelaw Reid was made the unanimous choice of the Convention for Vice-President amid cheers and applause.

Then there was a call for members of a committee to notify Harrison of his nomination. Ingall's name was mentioned with cheers, but McKinley was finally settled upon as the Chairman to formally notify candidates of the result of the great contest.

The Convention tendered a vote of thanks to McKinley for the impartial manner with which he presided; also to the citizens of Minneapolis and Minnesota for their generous treatment.

Then the Convention adjourned; sine die.

Harrison Ratified.

San Francisco, June 10.—The Republicans held a ratification in the Mechanics' Pavilion tonight after a big street parade.

Knight's of Pythias.

The town was full of them yesterday and we all felt happy to welcome them. Yesterday morning's train dropped a heavy delegation of Uniform Rank members from Wadsworth, Truckee and Virginia, also the Truckee drum corps composed of 12 little maidens who kept perfect time and step in the parade which started from the depot and wound up at the hall. After lunch another parade more extensive than the first was held.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected:

G. J. D. King, P. G. C., No. 1, T. R. Hofer, G. C. No. 4, W. S. Beard, G. V. C., No. 7, J. F. Aiken, G. P., No. 8, G. W. Hatch, G. M. of E., No. 11; A. B. Stoddard, No. 1; M. S. Boyle, G. M. at A., No. 13; O. A. Brooks, G. I. G., No. 12 C. D. Harmon, G. O. G., No. 19; M. C. McMillan, Sup. Rep., No. 1; W. H. M. Cobb, Sup. Rep., No. 12; Trustees; Benj. Currier, No. 16; W. J. Westerfield, No. 12; W. H. A. Pike, No. 19.

The convention then adjourned to meet in Virginia City the second Monday in June 1893.

Last evening there was a banquet at Odd Fellow's Hall where two hundred guests were served. There were toasts and music until midnight.

Pastor of St. Peter's.
